My dear mouse friends,

Have I ever told you how much I love science fiction? I’ve always wanted to write incredible adventures set in another dimension, but I’ve never believed that parallel universes exist . . . until now!

That’s because my good friend Professor Paws von Volt, the brilliant, secretive scientist, has just made an incredible discovery. Thanks to some mousetropic calculations, he determined that there are many different dimensions in time and space, where anything could be possible.

The professor’s work inspired me to write this science fiction adventure in which my family and I travel through space in search of new worlds. We’re a fabumouse crew: the spacemice!

I hope you enjoy this intergalactic adventure!

SPACE JUNK!

Scholastic Inc.
In the darkness of the farthest galaxy in time and space is a spaceship inhabited exclusively by mice.

This fabumouse vessel is called the MouseStar 1, and I am its captain!

I am Geronimo Stiltonix, a somewhat accident-prone mouse who (to tell you the truth) would rather be writing novels than steering a spaceship.

But for now, my adventurous family and I are busy traveling around the universe on exciting intergalactic missions.

THIS IS THE LATEST ADVENTURE OF THE SPACEMICE!
It was a calm Monday on the spaceship MouseStar 1. There were no cosmic disturbances, no alien invasions in the galaxy, and no unknown planets on the horizon.

Basically, it was a stress-free day, which hadn't happened in weeks, months, or maybe even years! I was about to sit back in my command chair, kick up my paws, and put the spaceship on autopilot.

Then suddenly . . .

BEEP! BEEEEEP! BEEEEEEEEMP!

What was that annoying noise?
I looked at the screen in front of me. My DIGITAL CALENDAR had an urgent meeting on it. Galactic Gorgonzola, I had completely forgotten!

Oh, excuse me, I haven’t introduced myself: My name is Stiltonix, Geronimo Stiltonix. I’m the captain of the MouseStar 1, the most fabumouse spaceship in the universe (though to be honest, my real dream is to be a writer!). Now, where was I? Oh, yes: According to my digital calendar, today was the MouseStar 1’s annual MECHANICAL inspection.

I was scheduled to tour the ship with our mechanic, Sally de Wrench. We would closely examine the motor room, the boiler room, the garbage storage room, and a zillion other places.

Stellar Swiss! I was so nervous about the inspection that my fur was soaked with sweat. You probably think I was afraid the ship wouldn’t pass the tests! But the real reason for my anxiety was Sally de Wrench. You see, she is the most fascinating mouse in the entire galaxy, and I have an enormous crush on her! Every time I see her, my legs go as soft as cream cheese, my squeak gets stuck in my throat, and my brain turns to Brie!

As I was thinking about Sally, MouseStar 1’s onboard computer, Hologramix, spoke up.

“Sally de Wrench is waiting for you on the lower level!”

I began to tremble from the ends of my whiskers to the tip of my tail. I tried to get out of my command chair, but my paws were heavier than wheels of aged Parmesan and my knees WOBBL ED like sticks of string cheese.

Unfortunately, my cousin Trap was sitting next to me, playing space checkers against his computer.

“What’s up, Cuz?” he asked. “You seem stuck!”

“N-no, it’s nothing,”
I stammered, my snout turning red with embarrassment. “I was just getting up.”

Trap took one look at me and figured out what was going on.

“Looks like someone is afraid to be alone with Sally, hmm?” he teased me.
Sweet As Honey on Cheese!

Trap pushed me toward the door of the command center.

“Cousin, you are as sweet on Sally as honey on cheese,” he said, shaking his snout. “But luckily I’m here to help you. Let’s go—you don’t want to keep her waiting!”

Mousy meteorites! Trap wanted to come with me for the inspection. I knew he would only make me feel even more embarrassed! But before I could protest, my cousin had grabbed me by the paw and pushed me into the liftrix, the special elevator that transports spacemice from one floor of our spaceship to another.

As soon as I stepped into the liftrix, a jet of air whisked me down to the lower levels of the MouseStar 1.

“Ahhhh!” I squeaked, caught off guard.

In one galactic second, I tumbled out of the glass tube and onto the floor of the lower level of the spaceship. I was about to get up, when . . .

BAM!

Trap crashed into me like an out-of-orbit meteorite!
“Whoops,” my cousin squeaked. “Sorry, Geronimo!”

Before I could GET OUT from under him, I heard a sweet female voice.

“Are you okay, CAPTAIN?” the voice asked. “What happened?”

Sally de Wrench was right in front of me.
Holey moon craters! How embarrassing!
I got to my paws and tried to think of something intelligent to say. But as I stood there staring at Sally's big blue eyes, my thoughts vanished like cheese in a black hole!

Luckily, Trap came to my rescue.

“A pressure problem inside the liftrix made us lose our balance!” he fibbed.

“Oh, my,” Sally replied. “I’ll be sure to take a look at that later. Now, are you ready to begin our inspection, Captain?”

“N-no,” I stuttered. “I mean, y-yes!”

Trap pinched me on the tail. Yikes! I had to get my nerves under control!
I cleared my throat and did my best to sound confident.

“Yes, I’m ready!”

Trap patted me on the shoulder so hard I almost fell over again.

“Good,” he said with a wink. “I’ll head back to the COMMAND CENTER, then. See you later, Cuz!”

And so I set out on my inspection of the MouseStar 1 with Sally as my guide. She explained all the technical details to me as we toured the spaceship. Even though I’m the captain, I have to admit that I don’t have a clue about how the ship works! It’s a good thing Sally is such an excellent mechanic.

“Well, that’s everything, Captain!” Sally announced after we had completed our inspection of the craft’s air filters.
I tried to think of something witty to squeak so that I’d get just a little more time with Sally, but my mind went completely blank.

“Um, er, e-e-everything seems to be okay!” I stuttered.

Sally smiled.

“If you need any further explanations, just let me know,” she said kindly.

Then she shook my paw and walked off.

The touch of her paw made me turn redder than the planet Mars. Oh, I’m such a hopeless romantic!
As soon as I returned to the command center, Trap practically jumped on my tail.

“So, how did it go?” he asked.

“Well, Sally did shake my paw,” I said with a sigh. “But I couldn’t think of anything intelligent to say!”

“When’s the next inspection?” Trap asked.

“Not for another six months,” I replied.

“But that’s such a long time from now!” my cousin said with a gasp.

“That’s the protocol,” I said with a shrug. “And I’ll have plenty of time to write my novel in the meantime.”

Trap shook his head. Then he got a mischievous gleam in his eye. That look meant only one thing: trouble!

"Wh-what is it?" I asked, suddenly very worried. My cousin always seems to come up with the most impossible schemes!

"Geronimo, what do you say we have a nice dinner together tonight?" he asked innocently.

"Thanks, but I'm very busy —" I began.

"Come on!" he said, cutting me off. "We can have a Fondue Feast! We never spend any quality time together."

Hmm. I considered his proposal. The MouseStar 1's chef, Squizzy, does make delicious fondue.

"Oh, all right," I said. "You convinced me! After all, it's easier to write on a full stomach."

"Meet me at eight at the Space Yum Café," Trap ordered. "And don't be late!"
I headed back to my room to get ready. As soon as I opened the door, my personal assistant robot, Assistatrix, grabbed me, lifted me up, and dropped me in my SparkleMousix shower pod.

"HELP!" I squeaked. "Let me go!"

But Assistatrix ignored me. A moment later, my fur was being scrubbed, rinsed, and dried.

Then it was time to get dressed.

"Captain, I suggest you wear a dinner jacket and your tie with the galaxies on it," Assistatrix said.

"Dinner jacket?!!" I protested. "But I'm not going to an interstellar gala!"

"Your cousin advised" me to dress you elegantly!" Assistatrix said.

“But you’re my personal assistant robot, not Trap’s,” I replied. “You’re supposed to do what I —”

Before I could finish my sentence, though, Assistatrix had slipped the suit over my head and sprayed me in a cloud of Cosmic Cheddar Cologne!
Then it nudged me out of my room with a firm shove.

“Hurry, Captain,” it yelled. “You’re already late!”

I looked around, hoping to catch an astrotaxi to the Space Yum Café.

Then I heard a little voice behind me. “UNCLE G! You look so elegant!”

It was my sweet nephew Benjamin and his friend Bugsy Wugsy!

“Hi!” I greeted them. “I’m meeting Trap for dinner.”

The mouselets began to giggle. It was almost as if they knew something I didn’t.

“Yes, he told us!” Bugsy squeaked.

“Actually, could you bring him these?” Benjamin added, handing me a box of Gorgonzola chocolates.

“But why?” I asked, confused.

“Um, he forgot them in the command room,” Bugsy explained.

Hurry, Uncle,” Benjamin squeaked. “You don’t want to make, um, Trap wait!”

Bugsy Wugsy and Benjamin burst into giggles again. What was so funny?

When I arrived at the Space Yum Café, Squizzy greeted me at the entrance. “Welcome, Captain!” he said. “Your cousin Trap told me to inform you that he will arrive in a moment. Meanwhile, please come this way!”

Squizzy led me to a private room in the back of the restaurant. A giant window offered a breathtaking view of the galaxy.

“Are you sure this is our table?” I asked, stunned. It seemed a little too fancy for a quick bite with Trap.

“Of course, Captain!” Squizzy answered, lighting a candle on the table.

Stellar Swiss! A candle? What was going on?
A moment later, I heard a sound. I turned to see . . . Sally de Wrench!

My paws began to sweat and my tail twisted into a knot. She looked extraordinary! Her long evening gown shimmered in the galaxy light, and her eyes sparkled like stars.

But just a minute! What was she doing here?!

We looked at each other in silence for a second. Then we both squeaked at once:

“But . . . where’s Trap?”

“But . . . where’s Thea?”
A Date in Space!

Then I understood: My sneaky cousin Trap had led me to believe we were going to dinner together. But he had arranged for me to have dinner with Sally instead. That’s why I was so dressed up!

And my sister, Thea, must have done the same thing to Sally!
“So that’s why Thea insisted I look elegant,” Sally said as she sat down at the table with me.

And that’s why Benjamin had given me the Gorgonzola chocolates: It was a present for Sally! With my heart pounding, I handed her the box.

“A s-small gift for you,” I stuttered. She smiled at me, and I turned bright red!

“Thank you!” she said. “You’re quite a gentlemouse, Captain!”

I melted like fondue when I heard the compliment.

“This is a really beautiful view, isn’t it?” I asked, trying to keep my whiskers from shaking as I squeaked.

“Yes,” Sally agreed, smiling kindly. “Trap and Thea certainly went out of their way to organize a really mouserific evening for us!"
A moment later, Squizzy arrived with our menus.
After a few moments of awkward silence, Sally got the conversation going.

“So, what do you like to do best, Captain?” she asked.

“Er—well, to tell you the truth, my real passion is writing,” I admitted.

“Wow!” Sally exclaimed. “I had no idea. What are you working on?”

“It’s a novel called —”

But before I could finish my sentence . . .

Something slimy and sludgy splattered against the window of the dining room! I decided to ignore it. I wouldn’t let that goopy slime interfere with my romantic dinner!
“As I was saying,” I continued. “I’m writing a novel about spacemice. I’m still on the first chapter—”

Ding! splash! glop!

Sally and I turned toward the window. Hundreds of objects in all shapes and sizes were speeding straight toward the MouseStar 1!

A moment later, Hologramix appeared in the air in front of us.

"YELLOW ALERT! YELLOW ALERT! YELLOW ALERT! YELLOW ALERT!" Hologramix shouted.

Martian mozzarella! A yellow alert? That meant there was a real emergency. We were in danger!

“Our spaceship is passing through a galaxy cluster of unidentified objects,” What's going on?
Hologramix explained. “Captain, get to the control room right away!”

How unlucky! A yellow alert right in the middle of my dinner with Sally!

“I’m sorry, Sally,” I said with a sigh. “But I really have to go.”

“Don’t worry, Captain,” she replied quickly. “I’m happy to come with you! I’ll help you figure out what those objects are.”

We hopped in an astrotaxi and zoomed toward the command center. When we stepped into the room, everyone turned to look at us.

Trap and Thea winked at me, Benjamin and Bugsy Wugsy giggled under their whiskers, and Grandfather William looked ANGRIER than a cosmocat with space fleas!

“What took you so long, Grandson?” my grandfather grumbled. “And look how you’re dressed. Don’t tell me that you were at a fancy gala while our spaceship is splashing through a sea of space junk!”

“Um, hello, Grandfather!” I replied, not sure what else I should say.

“Why aren’t you ever at your post when there’s an Emergency?” he continued to berate me.

“Don’t be angry, sir,” Sally intervened. “Your grandson was at dinner with me.”

Suddenly, my grandfather changed his attitude.

“Oh, excuse me!” he replied. “Well, everyone deserves a night off every now and then, right?”

Incredible! Sally had managed to defend me successfully to my grandfather!

“Of course,” Sally agreed. “Now, let’s get to more important issues: Did you say something earlier about Space Junk?”

“Yes!” Grandfather replied. “Space junk is Hitting us at top speeds!”
Watch Out: Junk Ahead!

Space junk? What was my grandfather talking about?

“Space junk is a conglomeration of many unwanted objects that are floating through space,” explained Professor Greenfur, MouseStar 1’s resident scientist.

Sally NODDED in agreement and squeaked, “I think I saw a piece of an old motor!”

But Robotix, the ship’s know-it-all multipurpose robot, corrected her.
“To be precise, it was a piece of an interstellar wave antenna,” he said.

“Are we in danger?” I asked. I was worried about my ship and its crew.

“Not if we remain still,” Thea explained. “That’s why I already turned off the motors. But if we start up the ship again, a piece of metal could damage the external hull!”

“Well, what do we do now?” Trap asked impatiently. “Wait until the junk floats away?”

“Yes, but that could take days, or even weeks!” Professor Greenfur replied.
Solar smoked gouda! We had to come up with another solution. Suddenly, I remembered something I’d seen during the inspection that morning. “We could collect the garbage and recycle it using the Stellar Garbage Sortrix,” I suggested. “That’s a great idea!” Benjamin exclaimed. “We learned all about recycling in school.
Instead of throwing all the garbage out, the Sortrix will divide it up based on the material it’s made of. Then it can be broken down and turned into new objects.

Professor Greenfur did some calculations. “We should be able to clean everything up and get moving again in about three galactic hours!”

Everyone cheered.

“Well done, Grandson,” my grandfather said, a look of surprise on his snout. “I knew there was a reason I appointed you captain of this spaceship!”

I couldn’t believe it. Was Grandfather really complimenting me? That only happened once in a blue-cheese moon.

“Um, wow! Thanks,” I replied, still stunned.

But then Grandfather continued. “Since you had such a great idea, Geronimo, I elect you to be the official space junk collector!”

Ah, I knew it was too good to be true!

“Come on, Cuz,” Trap said confidently. “I’ll come with you! A bit of exercise will be good for us!”

“But I suffer from terrible space sickness whenever I go on a space walk!” I squeaked in protest.

“Aw, you’ll be fine,” Trap replied.

There was nothing I could do. A few moments later, I was wearing a spacesuit and headed off into the cosmos to pick up the trash!

Soon I heard Sally’s voice through a microphone in my helmet.

“When you’re ready, I’ll activate the vacuum,” she explained. “You’ll use it to suck up all the space junk.”

“Ready!” Trap squeaked immediately.

I was still trying to figure out how my spacesuit worked, but it was too late.

The vacuum was already on, and the tube had wrapped itself around me!

“Grab the handle, Geronimo!” Trap yelled.

Handle? I reached out and tried to aim the tube toward a mass of garbage. But my paw ended up at the mouth of the tube instead, and I was nearly sucked inside.

“Trap, heeeeeeelp!” I squeaked in terror.

Luckily, he quickly came to my rescue.

Then a piece of trash got stuck in the tube and Sally had to reverse the flow to get it out. But I didn’t move in time—and I was blasted with a spray of liquid garbage.

Mousey meteorites, what a day!
Grab the handle!

Argh!

Heeeeelp!

Hey!

Careful!

Aaaaah!
Whose Trash Is It?

Once we had successfully vacuumed up all the trash, Trap and I returned to the command center.

“Great work, team!” Thea cheered. Then she turned the MouseStar 1’s motors back on and we began moving again.

“I wonder where all that trash came from,” Professor Greenfur mused.

“Well, if you had ever thought to ask your resident robot genius for help, you might know the answer,” Robotix replied in a very annoyed tone. “But no. Instead you rely on that digital fur-faced illusion that appears and disappears whenever it wants!”

Sure enough, in an instant, Hologramix appeared.
“How dare you!” the computer countered. “I resolve seven hundred forty-nine queries every second!”

“And yet you don’t know how to identify a simple piece of garbage!” Robotix replied in a huff.

Somehow, Trap managed to calm the two of them. They never missed a chance to fight about which one was a more developed form of artificial intelligence.

Once they had stopped arguing, I took Robotix’s bait.

“Robotix, do you know where the space
Whose Trash Is It?

junk came from?” I asked.

The robot looked at me with satisfaction.

“Of course!” he replied. “The trash is from Planet Cleanix, Captain! It’s easy to figure it out: Just look at the pieces of metal out there.”

“Huh?” I asked, confused. Robotix just sighed and shook his head.

“My memory bank contains a list of all the robotics that have ever been produced in this galaxy,” Robotix explained. “And these pieces come from Cleanix!”

“So all the trash must be from Cleanix,” Trap concluded. “stellar swiss, what littermice!”

“It’s true,” Professor Greensfur confirmed a moment later. “I calculated the trajectory of the garbage, and the planet Cleanix is located right in this part of the galaxy, so it all makes sense!"

“Okay, we now know Cleanix has a garbage-disposal problem,” I said with a yawn. “Now if you’ll excuse me, I really need to get some sleep. It’s very late and I’m so tired. And tomorrow —”

“Tomorrow we head to Cleanix!” Grandfather William interrupted. “This galaxy belongs to all of us, and everyone must work together to keep it clean.”

“Of course,” I agreed. “But we already cleaned up the mess ourselves.”

“That doesn’t matter!” Grandfather explained. “It is our duty to understand what’s happening there. Maybe they could use our help. Isn’t that right, Captain?”

“Y-yes, of course,” I said quickly. Sally agreed as well.

“It’s true,” she said. “That floating garbage could be really DANGEROUS for other spaceships! We need to do something about it right away.”

Our mission was clear.

“Spacemice, tomorrow morning, we leave for Cleanix!”
At seven the next morning, the whole MouseStar 1 crew was in the command center and ready to go.

I cleared my throat.

"Thea, are all systems ready?"

"Yes, Captain!" my sister replied.

"Then let’s head toward Cleanix at supersonic speed!" I ordered.

When we neared the planet, Thea slowed down the ship so that she could maneuver around large heaps of garbage that were floating in space.

Suddenly, Benjamin pointed at something outside the spaceship.
“Look, Uncle!” he squeaked. “You can see Cleanix. Doesn’t it look odd?”

I peeked out the enormous command center window. Sure enough, the planet was straight ahead of us. Half of it was unusually bright and sparkly, while the other half was wrapped in a greenish fog.

“How strange!” I agreed. “Hologramix, what do you know about this planet and its inhabitants?”

The computer responded instantly: “Half the planet is populated by Cleanix aliens, while the other half is uninhabited. Cleanix aliens are known for their excellent manners and extreme cleanliness.”
I breathed a sigh of relief. Maybe we would finally have a peaceful mission!

“We have reached the safety distance from the planet,” Thea announced. “The landing ship is P R E P A R E D, and I’ve alerted the Cleanix aliens to our arrival.”

“Great work!” I exclaimed. “Trap and Thea, put on your spacesuits and get ready for our M I S S I O N!”

I felt a tug at my sleeve, and I looked down into the wide eyes of my sweet nephew.

“Uncle, can we come, too?” he asked. “We learned all about the capital of Cleanix in school. Sparklina is a very high-tech city, and we would really love to see it!”

I looked at Benjamin and Bugsy. They were so excited! And it did seem like it would be a pretty safe excursion.

“Okay,” I replied. “But you have to promise you’ll stay near us the entire time. Agreed?”

“Of course, uncle Gi!” they replied in unison.

“Then I guess we’re all ready to —”

I was interrupted by a metallic voice:

“Captain, you aren’t forgetting about me, are you?”

I turned to see Robotix glaring at me as smoke billowed out of his air vents. Galactic Gorgonzola! He was furious.

“I’m the one who told you where the trash was coming from,” he reminded me. “So I insist that I come on this mission!”

“Um, yes, of course, Robotix,” I reassured him. “You’ll come, too!”

So we all boarded the space pod, our small landing ship, and headed for Sparklina!
Sparklina was a truly FANTASTIC city. There were tall, shiny towers; superclean streets; and large, colorful signs everywhere. Everything shimmered. Honestly, it was all a bit much for my taste. I wished I had remembered to wear my sunglasses!

We flew over the city and then headed to the spaceport. A delegation of Cleanix aliens were waiting there to meet us. They had put out a velvet carpet for us, and there was a floating table filled with delectable space treats!

As soon as we landed, a tall, elegantly dressed alien approached us. He smelled strongly of my favorite cologne: Cheesy Moon Craters No. 5.
There are the Cleanix-aliens!

What a welcome!
“I am the emperor, Samuel Sparkle,” he introduced himself. “Welcome to Cleanix, dear friends!”

I was a bit embarrassed by all the splendor, but I tried to assume a tone that was appropriate for the occasion.

“We spacemice are pleased to meet you,” I replied. “Thank you for the warm welcome! I am Geronimo Stiltonix, the captain of the MouseStar 1."

“Psst, Geronimo!” Trap whispered in my ear. “While you’re handling the pleasantries, we’re going to go nibble on some snacks, okay?”

I didn’t have a chance to respond because my cousin was already dashing toward the table and snatching up whatever his paws could reach.
I was so embarrassed, I turned as red as the planet Mars!

“Umm . . . you must, er, excuse them,” I explained sheepishly. “It’s been a long trip.”

The emperor smiled. “No problem!” he replied. “But tell me, what brings you here?”

Thea stepped forward. “During our galactic travels, we drove right into a stream of garbage that almost damaged our spaceship,” she explained. “The garbage seemed to be coming from your planet. Do you know anything about this?”

The emperor lost his sparkling smile immediately.

“I don’t know what you’re talking about,” he replied dryly. “Sparklina is the cleanest and most orderly city in the entire galaxy!”

BLACK HOLEY GALAXIES! We had irritated him. I tried to be a bit more diplomatic than Thea had been.

“Please excuse us,” I explained. “We didn’t mean to question your cleanliness! We’re just trying to understand where the garbage is coming from.”

The emperor’s sour expression didn’t change.

“Um, when we arrived, we also noticed that half your planet is surrounded by a greenish fog,” I pointed out, trying again. “Is everything okay on Cleanix?”

“That half is uninhabitable!” Emperor Sparkle replied quickly. “Don’t worry about it! Now, my daughter, Shimmer, will show you around our city.”
At that moment, a very elegant alien stepped forward. Even Trap stopped snacking for a moment to say hello.

“It would be an honor to show you around our fair city,” Shimmer said smoothly. “Please follow me and we can start the tour right away!”

“We’re coming,” my cousin Trap replied quickly, his snout stuffed with food. How rude!

But Shimmer wasn’t insulted. Instead, she looked amused!

“Farewell, spacenice,” the emperor said. “I will be happy to meet with you again after your tour. But one bit of advice: Don’t waste your time thinking about garbage. Why don’t you concentrate on shopping for some new spacesuits? You could use them!”

I looked at my spacesuit, confused. Sure, it was a little bit worn, but it was still totally functional. Plus I really liked it!

Meanwhile, at the emperor’s signal, a ROBOT had immediately started vacuuming up the dirt on the carpet—and all the leftover food on the table!

“Uncle, they threw everything away!” Benjamin exclaimed in surprise.

What a waste!
The tour of Sparklina began on a long street that crossed the whole city. It was decorated with all kinds of monuments.

“Farther down this street you can admire the statue of my grandfather, Reginald Shiny,” Shimmer told us.

As I studied the sparkly statue—which was decorated with diamonds and other precious stones—I thought I saw a small, very dirty, and very rusty robot dart around a corner.

Galactic Gorgonzola! How was that possible? Everything on Cleanix.
Seemed to be brand-new.

I was about to follow the robot when Trap distracted me.

"G, I can’t take it anymore!" he whined. "These statues are so boring. They’re all the same!"

"Sshhh!" I whispered under my whiskers. "Have a little more patience . . ."
Unfortunately, Shimmer had heard him, but strangely, she didn’t get mad. She actually started to laugh!

“Trap is right. That’s enough of these boring statues!” she said. “I just had an idea: I’ll take you to a place that’s much more fun!”

“Sounds great!” Trap cheered.

A few minutes later, we found ourselves in front of a supertall, supershiny, supersparkly superclean building!

Shimmer led us to the entrance.

“Welcome to the Cosmic Mega Mall,” she said proudly. “It’s the largest shopping mall in the universe. You can find products from every corner of the galaxy.”

Martian mozzarella! That place wasn’t just big—it was immense!
There were luxury stores everywhere. Extremely elegant Cleanix aliens were coming and going, their bags filled with clothes, food, and objects of all kinds.

"But what are they going to do with all this stuff?" Trap asked, stunned.

"The Cleanix people like constantly changing our clothes, furniture, computers, and spaceships," she explained. "We love everything new!"

"But what do you do with the old objects?"

"We throw them away," Shimmer replied simply. "We aren’t interested in things once they are used."

As Shimmer spoke, I watched an alien leaving one store with tons of bags. She stopped to take off her jacket—and she threw it into a floating trash can, and then put on a new jacket she had just bought!
You can buy everything here! Wow... it's enormous!
Only then did I notice that the shopping mall was full of floating trash cans and garbage robots that were gathering everything the Cleanix aliens were throwing away.

I was pretty sure I had an idea where all that trash ended up. But when I turned to ask Shimmer, she was dragging Trap toward a custom-made clothing boutique.

“You’ll look so great in something colorful and new!” Shimmer told my cousin.

Meanwhile, Benjamin and Bugsy Wugsy had spotted a video game store.

“See you later, Uncle G!” they called with a wave as they raced toward it.

I looked around for Thea and saw her entering a gigantic vehicle shop to look at the latest spaceship models.
It seemed as if everyone had abandoned me. Even Robotix was in a robot accessories store! I could see him discussing something with a shop clerk about something.

I was on my own. What should I do? I thought. I looked at the hologram map of the mall. My eyes lit up when I saw that there was a bookstore on the seventh floor. Mousy meteorites! I had to get there right away!
I went up a series of escalators floor by floor (luckily there was no liftrix on Cleanix!). I was almost at the seventh floor when, through a shopwindow, I noticed something flying around outside.

As I wondered what it was . . .

Bang!

I found myself lying on the floor in pain. While I had been busy looking out the window, the escalator had come to an end!

As I got back to my paws, I spotted a small, dirty, rusty robot dart behind a trash can. It was the same one I had seen earlier on the city’s main street!
The robot tried to zoom away, but I quickly grabbed him.

“Who are you?” I asked. “You’re different from the other robots around here.”

The robot looked around suspiciously.

“I’m a spy!” he said. “I’m following you to figure out if you’re a friend or an enemy!”

“Enemy?” I asked nervously. “Whose enemy?”

“You might be an enemy of the rebel robots who have been thrown away like garbage!” the creature said proudly. “We’re preparing for an invasion. We want the Cleanix aliens to understand that they can’t just toss us aside.”

“What do you mean?” I asked, very curious.

“First they sent all the robots they didn’t want anymore to the other half of the planet,” he explained. “Now they’ve started launching us into space with their Galactic Garbage Shooter!”

“Galactic what?” I asked, perplexed.

“If you go to the top floor —”

But before the spy robot could finish his sentence, one of the garbage robots approached.

“Class Z robot trash detected,” the garbage robot said in a metallic voice. “Vacuum immediately!”

Then he vacuumed up the little robot before turning to face me.

“Contamination detected!” the robot said. “Begin disinfecting!”

I didn’t have time to move a paw before I was covered from ears to tail in white foam. A second later, a stream of hot air dried me off.

“Have a good day, sir!” the robot said when the cleaning was complete.
Stinky space cheese. what was that about?

First the dusty little Spy robot, then the garbage robot with his vacuuming and disinfecting devices . . . something strange was going on!

Suddenly, I remembered what the spy robot had told me before he was vacuumed up:

“If you go to the top floor . . .”

So I went to the top of the building, where I found a panoramic terrace with a beautiful view of the entire city.

Initially, I didn’t notice anything strange at all. But then I looked through one of the telescopes mounted around the edge of the roof. What I saw made me jump back in shock. In the distance, an enormous catapult was shooting mounds of objects into orbit. It was the Galactic Garbage Shooter the spy robot had been taking about!

Black Holey Galaxies! It was true! The Cleanix aliens launched their garbage into space!

I had to return immediately to the others to tell them what I had discovered! When I arrived back on the ground floor, the first one I found was Robotix.

“Captain!” he greeted me. “Look at my NEW antenna! I had to negotiate for a while, but —”

“Yes, yes, that’s very nice,” I interrupted. “Have you seen the others? It’s important!”
At that moment, Thea popped out of the store she had been in.

“I’m right here, G!” she called excitedly. “I just bought a supercomfortable space scooter. It’s parked right outside . . .”

“Okay, okay,” I replied quickly. “But where are Benjamin and Bugsy?”

“Uncle!” squeaked a small voice behind me. “Look what we won!”

The two mouselets showed me a copy of the latest popular video game.

“Great,” I said. “Now, where’s Trap?”

“Here I am, Cuz!” my cousin shouted. “So, how do I look?”
I turned around and saw Trap dressed in a new sparkly gold spacesuit.

“Terrific,” I replied. “Do you know where SHIMMER is?”

“Oh, she went to buy some new shoes,” Trap explained. “She was wearing a pair she got yesterday, but she thinks the STYLES have changed already.”

I was RELIEVED to hear that the emperor’s daughter was busy somewhere else. I turned to my friends and lowered my voice. Then I told them about my encounter with the spy robot and about what I had seen from the top floor of the building.

“This story stinks!” Thea exclaimed when I had finished. “And it’s not just because it’s about garbage! The emperor didn’t tell us the TRUTH when we asked. I wonder what else he’s hiding!”
Thea and I had just made a plan to do some investigating when Shimmer returned with four new pairs of shoes. Everyone showed her their purchases.

“I knew you’d [like] it here!” she said, smiling brightly. “No one can resist the allure of the shopping mall! But now we need to return to the imperial palace. My father will be [upset] if we’re late.”

Thea and I exchanged a glance. We had to [slip away]! Suddenly, I had an idea.

“Speaking of your dad, uh, I’m a little [embarrassed] about these clothes,” I told Shimmer, gesturing toward my crumpled spacesuit. “I’d love to buy a new outfit before we head back.”

“Of course, Captain!” she quickly agreed. “I didn’t want to offend you, but that spacesuit you’re wearing belongs in the trash! Come on, I know a great store —”

“No, no,” Thea quickly intervened. “I’ll go with him because, uh, I know what he likes!”

“And these two mouselings and I didn’t get a chance to stop at the candy shop,” Trap added. “Would you come with us, Shimmer?”

“Definitely!” she said. “As long as we don’t take too long, we’ll get back to the palace on time. Let’s meet back here in a bit. HAPPY SHOPPING!”
As soon as Shimmer was out of sight, Thea and I headed toward the spaceport, where our space pod was parked.

Before we could reach our ship, though, an alien from the imperial guard stepped in front of us.

“Hold it right there, spacemice!” the guard ordered. “You cannot use your spaceship without the emperor’s authorization.”

HOLEY SPACE SWISS!

Now what?

But Thea was prepared. She put on a friendly smile.

“Won’t you please help us?” she asked sweetly.

“We just need to run back up to the MouseStar 1 to get the rest of our crew. This mall is so wonderful, we wanted to give our friends a chance to experience it for themselves."

“I’m sorry, but I cannot let you pass,” the guard responded severely. “Emperor’s orders.”

“I don’t think the emperor would be happy if he knew that you refused friendly guests the right to go shopping,” Thea said slyly. “We had heard that the hospitality on Cleanix was the best in the entire universe. But it turns out that’s not true. How disappointing!”

The guard looked flustered.

“Oh, well . . . I . . . umm . . .” he mumbled. After a moment of hesitation, he finally stepped aside.

“Go ahead,” he said quickly.
We scooted past him immediately, thrilled at our GOOD LUCK.

“Way to go, Thea!” I said as we hopped into the space pod.

Thea immediately pointed our spacecraft toward the part of the planet surrounded by GREEN FOG. We saw black mountains and dark gray clouds on the horizon.

What an UGLY landscape. We were flying over an enormous garbage dump! Trash was piled up as far as the eye could see. There were scraps of metal, computers, clothes, furniture, robots, spaceships, and more.
An Unauthorized Expedition

“It’s so sad,” Thea said, shaking her snout. “How could they do this to their planet?”

Suddenly, I noticed some movement under one of the heaps of trash.

“Thea, use the zoom scope on that patch of garbage!” I said, pointing to the spot below us.
We were shocked by what appeared on the SCREEN. Hundreds of discarded robots were emerging from the trash!

“What’s going on?” Thea asked. “It looks like the trash is coming to life!”

I remembered the spy robot’s words: “We’re preparing for an invasion . . .”

Galactic Gorgonzola! This wasn’t good.

“Thea, I’m afraid these rebel robots are about to invade Sparklina,” I said, worried. I quickly reminded her of what the spy robot had told me back at the shopping mall.

“Oh no!” Thea cried. “The Cleanix aliens haven’t treated those discarded robots—or their planet—very well. But there has to be another solution. We need to warn the emperor about their plan to invade Sparklina!”
Stop Right There, Spacemice!

With our motors at full speed, we headed back to Sparklina. But as soon as we got out of our space pod, a member of the imperial guard intercepted us.

"Spacemice, you are under arrest by order of the emperor," he said harshly. "You flew your spacecraft over the prohibited area!"

"U-under a-arrest?" I stuttered. "But we have extremely important information to —"

"Silence!" the guard ordered. "Now follow me to the imperial palace!"

Stinky space cheese!

This was just what we needed!
As we followed the guard, I carefully activated my wrist communicator and called Trap.

“Cousin, we’ve been arrested!” I whispered so the guard couldn’t hear. “Where are you?”

He responded immediately.

“We’re imprisoned in the emperor’s palace,” he explained quickly. “He found out that you took the space pod to SNOOP on the other side of the planet, and he came after us!”

“We found a bunch of discarded rebellious robots,” I told Trap. “We think they’re about to invade Sparklina and —”

I was interrupted by sudden shouts. I turned and saw some Cleanix aliens running at top speed.
The rebel robots had already entered the city!

In the distance, I saw a rusted robot squirting oil on buildings. A bit farther off, an old garbage truck was pouring its contents out onto the street and sidewalks. Another robot made out of household appliances was blaring music that was so loud and high-pitched, it was breaking... windows all around us!

Suddenly, a shadow fell over me. I turned and saw an enormous rebel robot made of machine parts moving toward me threateningly.

Shooting stars! I was in trouble!

A moment before I was crushed by the robot, Thea pulled me out of the way.

I was trembling from the ends of my whiskers to the tip of my tail. I had almost lost my fur!

“Thanks, Thea!” I gasped. “Just one astrosecond later and I would have been as flat as a fur-covered flying saucer!”

“No problem, G!” she said with a wink.

“Where did the guard go?”

“He ran,” I explained. “He must have been scared!”

“Well, that’s good news for us,” Thea replied. “Let’s get to the emperor’s palace immediately... The rebel robots are heading that way!”

When we reached the palace, though, we realized we were too late. The rebel robots had already arrived! The palace entrance was covered in broken glass and metal.

WHAT A GALACTIC MESS!
Thea and I entered the imperial palace slowly, keeping an eye out for the rebel robots. The building was almost completely destroyed: There was broken glass everywhere, and statues were in pieces.

“It’s completely empty.” Thea observed. “Where are the Cleanix aliens? And where are our friends?”

At that moment, we heard noises above us. We climbed some stairs and found an imperial guard tied up with electrical cords.

“What happened?” Thea asked as we freed him.
“Those recycled ROBOTS captured the emperor, his wife, and their daughter,” the guard explained. “They want to throw them into space!”

Oh no! It sounded like the robots were planning to get their revenge on the Cleanix aliens.
You’re Finally Here, Captain!

for flinging them into space with their Galactic Garbage Shooter.

“The leader of the rebel robots is one of the emperor’s old personal-computer robots,” the guard explained. “He said he wants to take back the city.”

Things were starting to make more sense. The recycled robots wanted to live in Sparklina instead of being thrown away and tossed into space!

“Maybe the Spacemice can help settle the dispute,” I told the guard.

“Great idea, Captain,” Thea agreed. “But first we need to free our friends.”

The guard seemed to trust us.

“The other spacemice are locked in the basement,” he said. “Follow me!”

We hurried down to a large metal door. The guard punched a code on a keypad, and the door burst open. There were our friends!
You’re Finally Here, Captain!

“It’s so good to see you, Uncle!” Benjamin said, giving me a little PECK on the snout.

“It’s about time!” Trap exclaimed. “I was starting to get a little hungry.”

“Well, you may still have to wait,” I told him. “A lot has been happening!”

“Of course, some of us already know that,” Robotix said in an ANNoyed tone. “Thanks to my new antenna, I’ve been listening in on the rebel robots’ conversations.”

“Really?” Thea asked, her ears perking up. “What are they saying?”

“The robots and all the other electronics discarded by the Cleanix aliens have organized,” he explained. “They want to prove that they’re still useful, and that it isn’t right to just throw them in the trash!”

It was just as I had thought! But there was one thing that I didn’t understand.

“I thought I saw a robot made out of kitchen appliances,” I told Robotix.

“Who built it? Did the rebel robots put it together by themselves?”

“Of course!” Robotix said. He sounded insulted. “The Cleanix aliens tossed out very sophisticated artisanal robots that were still in working order. And robots are very intelligent, you know!”
You’re Finally Here, Captain!

“We have to do something,” Thea said. “There’s no time to lose!”

“We need to get to the Galactic Garbage Shooter immediately,” I agreed. “If the Cleanix aliens and the rebel robots have any chance of working things out, we have to first save the emperor and his family!”

The guard led us to the palace garage, where the Superluxurious (but supertiny!) imperial spaceship was parked.

“We won’t all fit in there!” I squeaked.

Trap pushed me inside unceremoniously.

“Stop complaining!” he scolded me. “We just need to squeeze!”
We flew over the city, which was much less bright and sparkly since the robot attack.

“There it is!” Benjamin exclaimed when the Galactic Garbage Shooter appeared before us.

Solar Smoked Gouda! Thousands of robots were milling around!

We landed on a small hill and slowly made our way through the robots. They didn’t seem to care about us at all. Instead, they were all looking at the Galactic Garbage Shooter.

Unfortunately, the recycled robots were so TALL, I wouldn’t have been able to see a comet even if it had flown right over my head!
“Trap, let me climb up on your shoulders,” I told my cousin. “That way I can see what’s going on!”

“Great idea, Cuz,” Trap replied.

But even from the top of his shoulders, I couldn’t see worth a crumb of cheese!

“Benjamin, CLIMB up on top of my shoulders!” I told my nephew.

“Sure, Uncle!” he replied, scurrying to the top.
“Can you see anything?” I asked.

“Yup!” Benjamin squeaked. “The robots are loading the emperor and his daughter into the Galactic Garbage Shooter!”

Slimy space Swiss! We had to act fast.

“Run, Trap!” I called down to my cousin. “We need to stop those robots!”

Trap dashed through the crowd as Benjamin and I wobbled back and forth. Just as we were about to lose our fur by tumbling off Trap’s shoulders, we reached the Galactic Garbage Shooter. The rebel robot leader was about to give the order to shoot!

“Stop!” I squeaked.

The robot leader turned to us in surprise. “It’s those funny aliens who arrived this morning!” he said. “Who are you and what are you doing here?”
Launch them!

So long, space scum!

Hooray!
Let us down!

Help!

Who are you?

Stop!
“We are spacemice, and we came here to track down the source of all that junk floating in space,” I replied.

“You’re at the source,” the robot leader said. “The junk comes from this garbage shooter, which the emperor of Sparklina invented. The cleanix aliens throw away things constantly—including robots!—to make room for newer models. And they do it by shooting the trash into space. I worked for the emperor for months, but he threw me away just like everything else. He replaced me with a newer model with an underwater feature!”
“That’s terrible,” I said sympathetically.

“No, it’s ridiculous!” the robot exclaimed. “There are no oceans, lakes, or rivers on Cleanix. So it’s a useless feature! And I still work! It’s been the same for all these robots, too.”

He gestured toward the other rebel robots.

“It’s true!” cried a robot made of spaceship parts. “I was thrown away because my owner didn’t like my color anymore!”

“And I was thrown away and replaced by a model with six screens instead of five!” another robot shouted.

“You’re right to be angry, but maybe there’s another solution to the problem,” I suggested gently. “Sending the emperor and his family into space won’t change the way the other Cleanix aliens behave.”

“Maybe not, but it doesn’t matter now,” the robot leader replied. “From now on, the robots rule! Begin the countdown!”

“Ready for launch,” another robot announced. “Ten . . . nine . . . eight . . . seven . . . six . . .”
What a Surprise!

I covered my eyes with my paws so I wouldn’t have to see what happened to the emperor and his family.

“Wait!” someone cried. “F2-C7, is that really you? I can’t believe it!”

It was ROBOTIX!

“F1-C7! What a surprise!” replied the robot leader.

Then he STOPPED the countdown.

I uncovered my eyes and saw the two robots hugging each other, sparks flying everywhere.

GREAT GALAXIES! They knew each other?!

“You’re still intact,” the robot leader said to Robotix in disbelief. “So you weren’t demolished after all?"

“No, I still carry out all my functions perfectly on the spaceship MouseStar 1,” Robotix replied happily. “And, not to brag, but I’m much more advanced than their onboard computer.”

“Lucky you!” the robot leader said, still in awe.
“And what are you doing these days?” Robotix asked.

“Well, I was working for the emperor’s family, but after just six months of service, they substituted a new robot for me,” F2-C7 explained. “On this planet, they throw everything away constantly. That’s why we robots have decided to rebel!”

“I see,” Robotix said thoughtfully. “But maybe there’s another solution . . .”

The two robots began to chatter in another language. Of course I didn’t understand a thing!

“Um, excuse me, Robotix,” I said politely. “Can you tell me what’s going on?”

“Oh, I apologize, Captain Stiltonix,” he replied. “I forgot to introduce you! The robot leader is my cousin F2-C7!”

“Y-your cousin?” I asked, stunned.
“Yes, my real name isn’t Robotix—it’s F1-C7,” Robotix explained. “F2-C7 and I were built together in the same astroyear. But when I moved to the MouseStar 1, I lost track of him.”

“And now here we are!” exclaimed the robot leader. “And my clever cousin has an interesting idea about how to SOLVE our problem.”

“That’s superstellar!” I exclaimed. “What’s the plan?”

“Robotix suggested that we use the MouseStar 1’s garbage-recycling machine.”

“Of course!” I squeaked. “The Stellar Garbage Sortrix would be perfect for the job!”

“We could bring the Sortrix here to Cleanix to RECYCLE the planet’s garbage,” Thea agreed. “That way all the trash will have a new life! And, of course, we’ll encourage the Cleanix to throw out less.”
What a Surprise!

“Well done, Robotix,” I congratulated him. “That’s a GENIUS idea!”

“Could you let us down now?” the emperor called anxiously.

“Yes,” I agreed. “We wouldn’t want someone to press the launch button by mistake!”
Uh, can we get down now?

Release the emperor!
The rebel robots released the emperor, his wife, and his daughter from the Galactic Garbage Shooter.

"Thank you for your help," Emperor Sparkle said. "Without the spacemice, who knows where we might have ended up."

"That's easy," Trap replied. "You'd be in space!"

Shimmer threw her arms around my cousin's neck.

"My hero!" she exclaimed. "You and your friends saved us."

"I'm very sorry for having doubted you," the emperor said to me. "When you went
A New Era for Cleanix

My hero!

...to the Dark side of the planet, I thought that you were our Enemy..."

"I told you that the spacemice were our friends, dad!" Shimmer interjected.

"You're right," the emperor told his daughter. "I should have listened to you."

Then he turned to me.

"And I should have trusted you, Captain," he said. "Now what can I do to make up for it?"

"Solving your garbage problem would be a great start!" I replied.

"But that's why we invented the Galactic Garbage Shooter," he said.
“I’m afraid polluting space with your junk isn’t the answer,” Thea said sternly. “You should try using things until they no longer work, instead of just throwing good things away. Then you can recycle any garbage that you accumulate.”

“Recycle the garbage?” the emperor asked, a puzzled expression on his face. “Okay, but how?”

“The Stellar Garbage Sortrix, a machine we developed, can recycle ninety-nine point nine percent of all our garbage,” Thea explained. “That way we don’t throw anything away—not even cheese rinds!”

“We’ve already promised the robots we will lend you the Sortrix,” I added. “That way you can clean up your planet from top to bottom. And you’ll give new life to things that used to be garbage.”
The emperor gave me a serious look. Black holey galaxies, I couldn’t tell what he was thinking! But then he broke into a grin.

“Captain Stiltonix, I must admit that this is an excellent idea!” he exclaimed.

Then he turned to F2-G7.

“I’m sorry I tossed you out without thinking,” he said contritely. “Since you know garbage so well, I would like to make you Cleanix’s official Recycling Manager. What do you think?”

“I accept the position, Your Highness,” F2-C7 replied enthusiastically. “Let’s start recycling right away.”

What a relief! We had come up with a solution for an incredibly messy problem. I activated my Wrist Communicator and called the MouseStar 1 to tell everyone on board the good news. Unfortunately for me, Sally answered!

“What’s the word, Captain?” she asked eagerly.

“Umm . . . er . . . I—I . . .” I stuttered.

Cosmic cheddar!

My nerves always took over whenever I had a chance to talk to that fabumouse rodent!

“Captain Stiltonix?” Sally asked. “You’re not coming in clearly!”

Luckily, Trap came to my rescue.

“The captain’s wrist communicator isn’t working well,” Trap explained. “He wanted to ask you to prepare the Stellar Garbage Sortrix for transport to Cleanix. We’re loaning it to the emperor so he and his people can clean up their planet.”
“Copy that!” Sally replied.

From that day on, the Cleanix aliens began an era of respect for their environment—and for their objects. Before we returned to MouseStar 1, the emperor threw a party in honor of the spacemice.

It was superstellar!

Finally, it was time for good-byes: Robotix and his cousin F2-7 promised they would meet again within two galactic years, and Shimmer convinced Trap to return to Cleanix as soon as his new spacesuit got crumpled.
The Cleanix aliens insisted on giving us thank-you gifts. Mine was the highest honor in the city: A statue made from recycled metal was installed on Sparklina’s main street, right next to the one of former emperor Reginald Shiny!

Mousy meteorites, what an honor!

Our mission complete, we returned to MouseStar I. Now space would be clean again, and I could get to work writing about our encounter with the Cleanix aliens. And, of course, I had to reschedule my dinner date with Sally! Though, first I’d have to find the courage to actually squeak with her, snout-to-snout. But that, dear rodent friends, is an intergalactic adventure for another day!

Dear mouse friends,
thanks for reading,
and good-bye until the next book.
See you in outer space!
He is a spacemouse — the Geronimo Stilton of a parallel universe! He is captain of the spaceship MouseStar 7. While flying through the cosmos, he visits distant planets and meets crazy aliens. His adventures are out of this world!

Beware! Space Junk!

MouseStar 7 is surrounded by floating space junk! It’s yucky — and dangerous. Geronimo Stiltonix tracks down the source of the junk and meets very wasteful aliens. Even worse, robots that the aliens threw away have started to rebel! Can the spacemice restore harmony before the robots take over?
